or awareness, the path we take remains the same.

We'll bring visual consistency and make sense of mergers.

Custombrands can help.

And we'll remain on hand to oversee and manage your corporate identity.

It demonstrates a readiness to invest in the future, it connects emotionally, creating lifelong relationships and it gives employees an opportunity to join the debate.

People will trust and believe in it, because it's built on authenticity and truth.

WHO WE ARE

The "good old days" of mom and pop retailing have faded to a pleasant, sepia-toned reminiscence. In that magical time, early in the last century, understanding customers' needs seemed easy. Shop owner-operators knew their customers by name and their preferences by heart. Merchandising wasn't very scientific, but it was personal and, in its way, intimate. The growth of mass markets led over time to industry consolidation and the emergence of truly national and global retailers. By the 1980s and 1990s we were experiencing an explosion of consumer product choices and media outlets.

Retail chains grew larger and more operationally intricate, even as cable television and the Internet caused audiences to splinter. Retailers and manufacturers adapted by adding technologies to their arsenal. By the 1990s, retailers were hiring consultants to build econometric models representing consumer demand and provide advice on pricing, promotion and assortment to optimize their categories.

By the turn of the century, these techniques were packaged into software tools designed to enable demand modeling, forecasting and optimization on a repeatable and scalable basis. Retailers reaped significant rewards from category-centric merchandising optimization, with the ability to better meet consumer demand and achieve their business objectives.

Here at MPC, we understand a company's most valuable asset is their brand. The bigger a company grows, the harder it becomes to ensure consistency at every point of the consumer journey. Effective merchandising will enhance a brand's exposure and increase sales. It is also extremely important for protecting and growing market share. Recent research shows that 20% of the decision to purchase is logical and based on facts and 80% is emotional. This illustrates the
